

THE TALK

SO, YOU'RE FREAKED OUT! WE'VE GOT YOU.

You can Take Charge and start the fertility conversation with your doctor. Understanding there are options available to you and speaking with a reproductive specialist in a timely manner can improve your emotional outlook and future quality of life.

WE KNOW YOU MAY:

- Feel uncomfortable and awkward about bringing up fertility issues.
- Not know that you DO have options for preserving fertility.
- Be totally consumed with the fact that you just got a cancer diagnosis and cannot think about anything else!
- Be unable to think about fertility or your future family because you just heard the word "CANCER" and it's all you can think about.

We know. We understand. We are here to help!

We don't want you to regret not considering your fertility prior to starting cancer treatment. Because you DO have options and you can TAKE CHARGE.

Even people with a poor prognosis may want to consider fertility preservation. When possible, patients should see a fertility preservation specialist prior to starting cancer treatment.

Remember: There are other ways to build a family after cancer if you are unable to preserve your fertility or choose not to. Talking with a specialist can help you explore other options that might be right for you.

SO START THE CONVERSATION NOW AND ASK YOUR DOCTOR:

How will my cancer and my cancer treatment affect my fertility?

Do I have time to pursue fertility preservation?

Can you refer me to a fertility preservation specialist so I can learn more?

Based on my treatment plan, what is my risk for infertility?
